A TALE OF TOOTHBRUSHES AND MARY TUDOR SMITH

Which Goes to Show War Is an Old-Fashioned Peacemaker and Hard on Lawyers-You Can't Mother a Soldier and Divorce Him, Too

I HAVE suspected it all along. But last Monday morning, when Mary Tudor Smith got insulted I knew it was true. War is doing away with divorce. Statistics in some cities back up the assertion; at least there are fewer divorces ince the war. In other cities there is no appreciable difference.

But supremely above statistics stood Mary Tudor Smith that morning with a knitting bag on her arm and a service pin on her ruffly gingham collering from the live at home. Naturally, meeting her in a railroad station one would feel privileged to avoid the subject of husbands.

"Well," she said, after we had greeted each other, "aren't you the least bit interested in Henry?" But how was I to know about the aviation sorps and the little letter that trailed its meek, pleading way across to hat Oklahoma camp? How was I to know about the aviation sorps and the little letter that trailed its meek, pleading way across to hat Oklahoma camp? How was I to know about the aviation sorps and the little letter that trailed its meek, pleading way across to hat Oklahoma camp? How was I to know about the same, Mary looked insulted.

TALK about the lure of the uniform. It has no stronger lure than to make a wife decide to forget everything in the world but the fact that a man who belongs to her is going forth to fight for her and her kind.

There was Mary Tudor Smith, a girl who never had to think of anything more serious than keeping her hair plus separated from her hair net on the dressing table at night. Nothing more upsetting than picking out the wrong kind of French pastry had ever ontered her life. And so when mar-ontered her life. And

AN AFTERNOON FROCK FOR WEE MISS BETTY

White Lawn Smocked in Pink

ONE frequently observes that a mother will sacrince her own clother and her appearance for that of her baby. "My baby must have the hear," says mother, and we love her for it.

But today, while off on an adventure with a very slender purse, there were iscovered some little girls' dear. with a very siender purse, there were discovered some little girls' dresses that are so reasonable and withal so very pretty that every opportunity is offered to dress these dear little people to the heart's content and still remain well

A little morning dress, for instance of pale blue chambray with rempers at-tached combines awast simplicity with real common sense. Dark enough not to become solled with one wearing, it is relieved at the neck and sleeves with plain white collar and cuffs. The severe-ness of the straight box plaif in front ess of the straight box plain in from a softened by fullness on either side, which is held in by derk-blue smocking. Sunning pockets topped with white add not the right touch to the full skirt. A little lady with dark boxed harr and sewitching blue eyes would be quite presistible in this quaint model, which

And for afternoon, when Mistress Betty is washed and dressed for daddy's homecoming, there is a white lawn frock smocked in pale pink at the high waist line and to whish pale pink collar and cutts lend a touch of color that
